

FARMER PHIL BOUNCES BACK RIDING A KANGA!

If you've ever had to dig a hole in the Kings Lynn area in Norfolk, then you're probably well aware that spade work in that part of the world can tear open fresh blisters on the oldest and toughest of calluses. All that famously picturesque Norfolk scenery above the ground belies a defiant and mongrel soil below that seems to take cruel pleasure in tormenting even those with the luxury of using machinery to dig their holes.

Philip Kew, of Kew Landscaping knows only too well how tough it is to work with Norfolk soil – as an ex farmer and now a landscaper, he knows that it's never an easy digging dirt in King's Lynn.

"One day you'll be digging into hard clay, the next day flinty soil, and then you might get clay-heavy silt, or maybe black peat and hard chalk" explains Phil, "you get it all within a 10 mile radius".

It was whilst Philip was carrying out his first big job that he initially came across a "wonder-from-down-under" that would, in time, take his business to new levels of success. – Philips excellent name and reputation within the landscape industry was second to none, he had to get this job finished to perfection and in as shorter time as possible to keep the customer happy.

"We had to put some bollards in at a power station and all I could hire was a Kanga. I was so pleased with the results it gave; I liked the way it got through narrow gaps into back gardens, unlike other, wider models I've used."

The Kanga Loader, you see, is slim and gets access where other machines can't.

The problem for Phil was that he assumed that to afford such an obviously well made piece of kit would mean forking out a five-figure sum; how wrong he was.

"I saw one at a landscaping how and realised what great value for money Kanga products really are. I knew now there was nothing stopping me from getting one for myself. Digging holes in that Norfolk soil used to take 10 minutes per hole, now, thanks to my Kanga machine, they take 30 seconds."
